

CHARLES ANTIS:

Fulfilling a Core Corporate Value Through his Support of Habitat OC

Habitat for Humanity of Orange County's newest board member, Charles Antis, has been involved with the organization for just two and a half years. Yet in that time, he's already shown himself to be one of Habitat's strongest advocates and supporters.

President of Antis Roofing & Waterproofing Inc., Charles and his company have donated the labor to install roofs on every Habitat home built since May, 2009. In addition, he and his company have been instrumental in facilitating the donation of roofing and other building materials from companies throughout Southern California. Habitat is even prominently featured on Antis Roofing's website!

Charles first worked in the roofing industry during college, founding Antis Roofing a few years later in 1989. The company works exclusively with homeowner associations in Orange, Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties, specializing in reroofing, decking, maintenance and leak repair of existing condominium communities.

A native of Oregon, Charles attended Brigham Young University before moving to California at the age of 21. The father of three and grandfather of one, Charles loves to fish and is fascinated by science – he attends lectures at Cal Tech on a regular basis, and recently traveled to Arizona State University to hear a presentation by physicist Stephen Hawking. He also loves to travel – recent trips include a safari to South Africa with his son and daughter, and a trip to Alaska. “I enjoy adventures – but prefer adventures with little risk!” said Charles.

“Antis Roofing has three core values,” Charles stated. “A commitment to company and culture, being responsible in our trade, and social responsibility. Our relationship with Habitat helps us meet our third value – in fact, Habitat is at the top of our list in how we meet our commitment to social responsibility.”
